Sep. 29 Shippensburg University Memorial Auditorium 7-9 p.m.

The Cumberland Valley in Pennsylvania has served as a vital transportation link for many centuries. The corridor funneled settlement and attracted the attention of Confederate generals during the Civil War.

Today, the I-81 Corridor is one of the nation's most important interstates and plays an important economic role for local communities. Dr. Paul Marr of Shippensburg University will discuss the history of transportation in the South Mountain region, followed by a panel discussion on contemporary land use issues. About the workshop... Randall Arendt, Senior Conservation Advisor at Natural Lands Trust will conduct a workshop focusing on practical ways of reclaiming existing commercial highway strip centers.

The presentation includes a one hour lecture illustrating progressive approaches that emphasize various redevelopment design strategies to create mixed-use centers from existing highway strips. The workshop will also help communities implement smarter, more sustainable development patterns, and includes ideas for improving economic viability and attractiveness.

A design exercise will follow providing attendees with an opportunity to retrofit an existing section of a degraded commercial highway strip center. Using aerial enlargements of an existing commercial strip center in the South Mountain landscape, participants will mark up the base map to illustrate how the improvements described in the presentation could be implemented.

Municipal leaders, planning commission members, professional planners, landscape architects, engineers, commercial property owners, investors, and developers are encouraged to attend.
